SOVIET CLAWS IN CANADA.

Ottawa Investigates Progress of Propaganda.

OTTAWA, Aug. 24.—An account of the conditions prevailing in Soviet Russia is to appear in the Labor Gazette for August, with a warning that certain organizations in Canada are working to further the Soviet plan for world revolution.

The article states that the following organizations propose "to take over our economic system by forcible means": The Socialist party of Canada, International Bible Students, the One Big Union, the Labor Church, the Russian Socialist party, the Ukrainian Socialist group, the Finn Socialist group, the Ukrainian Dramatic Society (Moose Jaw), Ex-Soldiers and Sailors' Labor party (Winnipeg), the Union of Russian Workers, Zinka (Ukrainian Bolshevik), Spujnia (Polish), the Italian Bolshevists, the Jewish Bolshevik party, the Socialist Revolutionary party, the Anarchist group, Industrial Workers of the World, and the Communist Labor party.

The article adds by way of comment: "Their policies differ in degree only; almost all repudiate religion."

The articles declares that there is need of the opportunity for work by the Christian churches of every denomination." Certain so-called "labor churches" are regarded as Propaganda bureaus for Socialism.

The Labor Church is stated to be a subsidiary of the One Big Union, the first being formed by Rev. Wm. Irvine in the winter of 1918-19.

The article further states a number of these organizations control certain so-called labor papers, the most influential of which are the B. C. Federationist of Vancouver, Searchlight of Calgary, O.B.N. Bulletin of Winnipeg, Vapaus (Finnish) of Sudbury, Travailliste, in English and French (Montreal), and others in foreign languages.

Wire-pulling is suggested with the Martens Soviet Bureau in New York as the centre. It is reported in the article that the Soviet Bureau in New York knows the whereabouts of the O.B.U. branches in Canada. It mentions that many $50 American bills were distributed among foreign workers during the community strike of last year. Excerpts are quoted from speeches of O.B.U. leaders to show that the Winnipeg strike was a test attempt for Soviet government, and that the next attempt may be nation-wide.

MANY LIVES WERE LOST

Great Freighter Sank Following a Collision.

Terrible Tragedy In Lake Superior—Water Ran Into Boiler Room of Doomed Vessel, Causing Terrific Explosion, and Only Four Members of the Crew Were Rescued by Passing Boats.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Aug. 24.—With practically no chance to save themselves, 22 men and one woman, members of the crew of the giant ore carrier, Superior City, were blown to their deaths in the chilly waters of Lake Superior, off Whitefish Point, late Friday night, when the steamer Willis L. King, collided with the Superior City, punched a hole in her side through which a torrent of water poured down into her furnace room, causing a huge explosion which virtually blew off the ship's stern.

In less than two minutes after the crash, according to the four survivors, the ship settled, her load of 7,500 tons of ore carrying her quickly to the bottom in about 200 feet of water. The collision occurred four and one-half miles northeast of Whitefish Point, Lake Superior, although the air was just a trifle hazy, according to survivors.

The survivors were: Captain Edward Sawyer, G. G. Lehne, second mate; Peter Jacobson, wheelsman, and Walter Richter, boatswain.

The King crashed into the Superior City aft of midships on the port side. All members of the crew of the Superior City were aft over the boiler rooms, scrambling for safety as calm the blast came. Not one of the four men saved knows more than that when he regained consciousness it was in the cold waters of the lake and fighting for his life.

All the survivors bear evidence of their experience in broken and burns. Captain Sawyer, with his face and head swathed in bandages to protect his wounds and raw skin, could not talk. He is heartsick over the fate of his crew and the vessel and wary of divulging more facts about the wreck than he must.

What caused the King to ram the Superior City is no made clear by any survivor or member of the crew of the King, which is lying here, with a great hole in her bow. All the officers refuse to answer questions. However, it is said that the King's captain is charging that the Superior City swung across her bow, in violation of previous understandings by whistle signals.

The true facts will probably be ascertained at an investigation, attorneys for both vessels having been secured here. Captain Sawyer was rescued in open water, clutching a life-preserver, which he had not had time to unbind. Lehne, who is the second mate, G. G Lehne of Chicago, was found clinging to the bottom of a lifeboat.

Not a sign has been found of any other member of the crew, although the steamer King stayed at the scene until daylight Saturday and then assisted in the search by other passing vessels. Of the entire stream of ships passing the point of the wreck on Saturday, not one reported having any wreckage or bodies, and it is thought the explosion ground up the wreckage to such a point that the buoyant parts were destroyed.

The Superior City carried a crew of thirty-two and one woman, according to George A. Marr, secretary of the Lake Carriers' Association. She left Sandusky, bound up the lakes, on August 14. There was one change made at the Head of the Lakes, Jim Hyland, able seaman, was taken in the place of one man who left the vessel on account of illness. The man's name does not appear.

Following is a list of the members of the crew as the Superior City left Lindsay, Ont., on her last journey: Mich., captain; Leo Reese, Detroit, first mate; G. G. Lehne, Chicago, second mate; Walter Richter, Lorain, Ohio, boatswain; John Gallow, Detroit, wheelsman; Bernard Masiak, Marinette, Wis., wheelsman; Gerald A. Clevis, Cheboygan, Mich., lookman; Peter Jacobson, Cleveland, seaman; J. S. Camgus, Cleveland, seaman; Jay McHatton, Palestine, Ill., seaman; James Hyland, Chicago, seaman; Clarence Sprague, Cleveland, seaman; Geo. S. Ferguson, Geneva, Ohio, engineer; Conrad Schmaut, Ohio, second engineer; E. H. McCullough, Marquette, Mich., third engineer; Peter Robelski, Manitowoc, Wis., oiler; G. Tinay, Youngstown, O., oiler; Jos. Tadorsky, Cleveland, oiler; Albert Wehner, Cleveland, oiler; Thomas Mc Munhe, Duluth, fireman; Arve Linquist, Hancock, Mich., fireman; John Unsitola, Chisholm, Minn., fireman; Angel Gaynoso, Ford, fireman; Bernard Burke, Chicago, fireman; James S. Hickey, Gary, Ind., coal passer; F. A. Krieger, Jackson, Mich., coal passer; Steve Wosick, Chicago, coal passer; Jesse A. Hardey, Cleveland, steward; Wm. D. Bass, Circleville, O., cook; C. J. Richardson, Cleveland, waiter; G. W. Parker, Cleveland, porter.

The Superior City was a steel-built ore and grain carrier 450 feet long and fifty feet wide, built in 1909 by the Pittsburg Steamship Co. of Duluth. She was of 4,795 gross registered tonnage, with a capacity of 6,900 gross tons and had six watertight compartments.

The steamer Willis L. King, of 7,568 gross tons, and 10,000 tons capacity, is 600 feet long and 58 feet wide, and was built in 1911 for W. H. Becker of Cleveland.

The steamer Willis King, which rammed the Superior, made temporary repairs to a great hole in its bow here, and left at 6:30 p.m. today for Lake Captain Herman Nelson of the King refused an explanation of the accident, declining any comment.

RED ARMY IN RETREAT

Extent of Polish Victory Not Yet Known.

Paris Takes Moderate View of Collapse of Bolsheviki Invasion of Poland, But the News from Minsk Regarding Peace Negotiations, Although Unofficial, Is Regarded as Hopeful—Dramatic Change of Fortunes.

PARIS, Aug. 24.—A faint note of doubt as to the extent of the Polish victory is beginning to make itself heard here. On the other hand, the news from Minsk is encouraging. Although the reports received from that seat of the negotiations for an armistice and peace are vague and unofficial, it would appear that Poland's reply to the Bolshevist proposals leaves abundant room for attaining an understanding between the conflicting delegations.

As for the military situation, the question that arises is: have the Poles been engaged yet with the main body of the Red army in the River Bug, or is it only with cavalry and light infantry outposts that Gen. Pilsudski's legionnaires have been battling? Unconfirmed reports of a tremendous struggle now in progress in the Brest-Litovsk sector reach here, but in the absence of definite information at the Quai d'Orsay it is impossible to check them up.

Of course most of the Paris newspapers are pro-Polish. But one of them remarks warningly, "Disagreeable surprises may be in store for us," and it emphasizes the duty of the Poles against any repetition of Pilsudski's disastrous attempt to re-establish the Poland of 1772 by conquest.

A despatch from Berlin says the Polish envoys at Minsk have been instructed by their Government to maintain the following points:

First.—Absolute equality in the negotiations, without distinction between the victors and the vanished.

Second.—No capitulation in any form.

Third.—Disarmament only on a reciprocal basis.

Fourth.—The delimitation of Poland's eastern frontiers.

Fifth.—Before they discuss the question of a common frontier between Russia and Germany.

According to another despatch from Berlin, the Polish Journal publishes, the Bolshevists have not changed their conditions, which are those given out by Kameneff in London.

According to l'Information, apparently the only clauses in the Soviet terms in the hands of the envoys whose objection are those calling for the reduction of the Polish army to 50,000 men and the surrender to Russia of all the war material in excess of above that necessary to maintain that force.

L'Information remarks that the Bolshevists, being at war with Gen. Wrangel, could not agree to reciprocal demobilization, but they might compromise by agreeing to limit the number of troops they would keep on the Polish border.

Military history has rarely afforded so dramatic a change of fortune as that which occurred at Warsaw.

In less than 100 hours the Red army, at the point of the sword and wand was changed from a triumphant host, bringing a great campaign to a magnificent conclusion, to a broken rabble of fleeing, helpless men.

Hundreds of Polish peasants who remained on their farms through the Red advance, have come out to greet troops who are pursuing the fleeing Russians with the request that they be sold as horses the Red army weapons left strewn over their property. They have hundreds of machine guns and rifles, and some pieces of artillery. Ammunition for them only problem. Disarmed Bolshevists have camped on their property, but refused to run and too disorganized to fight. The peasants complain that it is unpleasant to have their areas littered with Bolsheviks.

ROAD WAS MINED.

Sinn Feiners Attempt to Massacre Soldiers.

BELFAST, Aug. 24. — For two hours and a half an infernal machine defended Ballymahon Barracks, Longford, against over a hundred rebels, who eventually bombed the roof, which fell in on the defenders.

By a ruse a body of rebels rushed a military detachment at Longford, obtaining several rifles and a supply of ammunition. The military report from the headquarters at Claremorris, Mayo, was mined with dynamite. The plan was foiled with connecting wires at a point where the road was barricaded. Fortunately the mines failed to explode.

While a train was being made on Swinford railway station, where over two thousand pounds' worth of military stores were destroyed, a party of armed men attacked the residence of several well-known Sinn Feiners in Bantry, shooting into them and doing much damage. The Sinn Feiners fled. The military republican knowledge of the matter. The rebels evidently don't like their own medicine.

Various raids on mails, and holding up of trains are reported from the South and west. The boycott of Belfast is getting more effective. Very little except flour ad sugar, which cannot be obtained freely.

Queen's Island workers on Monday further tightened the conditions under which loyal Romanists may return to the works. That is their answer to the Belfast boycott. Already southern skulkers who came north to take Ulster volunteers' jobs in 1914, are beginning to return home.

LOVED BY AUSTRALIANS.

Prince of Wales Has Started for Home.

SYDNEY, Australia, Aug. 24.—The Prince of Wales sailed for England last Thursday. He carries all Australasia in his pocket. He has revealed here the same stunt that he did in Canada.

Excepting the railroad strike in New Zealand, the prince met a super-generous treatment everywhere, even radical Queensland outdoing itself. Statesmen, laborers, sheep herders, and thousands of soldiers cheered the Prince of Peace. He has proven himself the most valuable asset of the Empire, cementing the cracks in the Dominion alliances.

New Turkish Cabinet.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 24.—Damad Ferid Pasha, the Grand Vizier, is conferring with notables daily regarding the formation of a new Cabinet. It is believed in Government circles that there is likely to be a change in the purpose of conciliating the followers of Mustapha Kemal Pasha, the Nationalist leader. Damad Ferid's retirement is also considered possible as a necessity in view of the Nationalist's opposition to him. An opinion currently expressed is to the effect that the Government would be unable to offer effective military resistance to Mustapha Kemal's forces even if the Entente permitted such action.

Bush Fires In Manitoba.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 24.—Three persons are known to have lost their lives, and a new school building was razed by bush fires which swept through the village of Mulvihill, 96 miles north of Winnipeg. The dead are the wife, mother and father of George Ward.

Fires throughout a wide region have been destroyed by the flames, which have been slowly burning for several weeks. High winds during the last few days fanned them into greater force and volunteer firefighters were unable to check the spread before the village was endangered.

Canadians to Leave Montenegro.

LONDON, Aug. 24. — The Montenegro Foreign Office states that the Serbian authorities in occupation of the country have ordered Col. Burnham, chief of the Canadian War Hospital Mission, with four lady assistants, to leave Montenegro immediately.

Col. Burnham was threatened by the District Governor and finally the mission was ordered to quit the country.

THE MODERN GYPSY.

The "Model" Seen In Our Dominion In 1920.

If George Borrow were alive to-day what keen delight he would take in writing a book on the gypsy caravan, 1920 model! No longer do the tribes of Romany go about in horse-drawn wagons, covered, and concealing in their mysterious depths numbers of stolen children — at least, so most youngsters are taught to believe. And horse traders are not the chief business of these nomads, has given place to a much more modern traffic.

Not quickly did the gypsies quit their historic methods. For years after the automobile became popular their quaint caravans might be seen on country roads or city streets, unchanged. Now Romany is become motorized.

To see a modern caravan, composed of motor cars of varying sizes and models, go lurching through a city street, with perhaps a truck or two to carry the tents and more bulky necessities, is to realize that after all these centuries the hand of modern civilization has at last been laid upon these mysterious people.

They ride in automobiles in a fashion all their own. Ten or fifteen pile into a five-passenger model with much personal baggage and with little regard for the conventions. What does it matter if a few legs and arms project over the sides or if a head sticks through the rear curtain here and there?

All the guile learned in years of wayside dealing that most outfitted of all occupations, has been brought over into trading automobiles, and there is some member of the tribe who can tell a faint blue roll where horse" ends and "motor car" begins. Chocolate colored, plump out the bolsters in his flanks with some black magic and the lowest two-year-old spirits by dosing him with something now prohibited by the Eighteenth Amendment, now puts temporary patches on worn tires, passes old motors until they roar with power and with rare skill converts anfluated cars into seemingly youthful if handsome vehicles.

What effect this complete change of living is to have upon the lives of those ancient peoples, who have kept contact with civilization for so many centuries and remain untouched by it, cannot be forecast as yet. The women have quit their gaudy finery, the colorful garb of Romany for motor coat and the men steadfastly refuse to dress in any of the accepted fashions of modern life.

There are as many children as ever, too, and dogs, no longer able to keep up afoot, ride in state in the cars, and the wife with children and other live stock.

A Canadian Saint.

The canonization of Jean of Arc has been completed, and she is now a saint. A patient investigation has been carried on for forty-five years by the Roman Church, and complete vindication of the Maid of Orleans and the conceding to her of the divine powers which French tradition ascribed to her.

It is reported from Rome that Canada is soon to have her first saint —Ste. Marguerite of Canada. As far as can be learned at present she is taken toward's the canonization of Marguerite Bourgeoys, who was born at Noyes, in France, in 1620, but as a young woman came to Canada, founded the Ladies of the Congregation of Notre Dame, and died at the age of 73 in the year 1700. She spent her long life as a teacher, mostly with the French settlers, but mostly with the Indians, and in the face of many hardships. Her influence and prestige gave the most devoted service. There is no finer story anywhere than Parkman's account of such devoted lives as hers. Some years ago the United States 131 religious schools have been named after this woman, and she is soon to be canonized by her church which will be the first resident of this continent to achieve the honor of sainthood.

Wouldn't Admit He Was Alive.

There lives in Toronto to-day a man who, like Mark Twain, can say the report of his death was "greatly exaggerated." Arthur Field, 84 Howard Park Avenue, was a Cobalt pioneer, who later hit the trail for far-off Alaska. When the war broke out he returned home to fight for his native land and served with distinction in the English gas corps. After 154 days of continuous fighting in France he was severely gassed that the doctors accounted him dead and sent his identification disc to England. He recovered and although he made several personal visits to the War Office he was unable to convince them he was still alive and they maintain to this day that he is dead—fatally gassed in France. They reported him dead and that settles it, so far as they are concerned. Field, however, refuses to die.

Won't Deal With Lenin.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 24. — Russian deposits lying in Copenhagen banks against the claims of the Bolshevists, is the decision of all the banking corporations here, who decree that in future there must be no deal with anyone connected with Lenin's Government.

This decision was prompted by revelations that Litvinoff's propagandists are operating with the millions of smuggled Russian gold throughout Denmark.

Litvinoff already has withdrawn some gold which he transferred in storage to his summer residence outside of Copenhagen.

First Spike Is Driven.

DETROIT, Aug. 24.—The first spike in the Detroit municipal street railway system was driven by Mayor Couzens yesterday afternoon to the accompaniment of cheers from half a dozen foreigners who had been ordered ready to lay the rails in place, but whose knowledge of English left them very much in doubt concerning the importance of their role. The spike was of the ordinary kind, except that somebody had painted it in bronze. Cornelius Conway, construction foreman, held the spike, while the mayor belabored soundly with a big hammer. Then the spike was pulled out again and presented to the mayor as a souvenir.

THE PORT OF MONTREAL

RANKS NEXT TO NEW YORK ON THIS CONTINENT.

No Other Harbor In North America Handles Such a Volume of Traffic, As It Is Both an Ocean and Inland Shipping Centre—It Is Nearer to England Than New York.

HOW many Canadians realize that the port which handles the greatest volume of traffic on the continent, next to New York, is not Boston, nor Philadelphia, nor Baltimore, nor New Orleans, nor San Francisco, but the Canadian river—port of Montreal,—and that in spite of the handicap that the harbor is open for barely more than seven months a year?

Nowhere else in the world is there to be found a port, accessible to all but the very largest ocean-going vessels, one thousand miles from the sea. London, Liverpool, Glasgow, Hull, Hamburg, Rotterdam, Antwerp, Le Havre, Hong Kong, Shanghai—these all have riverside docks, but whereas they are located on estuaries, Montreal is set deep in the interior of the continent. And yet, in spite of being a thousand miles inland, Montreal is nearly 250 miles nearer Liverpool (via Belle Island) than is New York.

Montreal is unique as a port in another momentous respect. Not only is it the farthest inland harbor for sea-going vessels, but it is also the outlet of the greatest system of interior waterways to be found in the world. From Thunder Bay to the Lachine Canal grain carriers can reach Montreal from the very centre of the continent,—1,600 miles of continuous navigation by lake, river and canal. It is true that at the present time only vessels whose draft does not exceed 14 feet can travel between Montreal and Lake Erie, but if the project of the deepening of the St. Lawrence Canals, now being considered by the International Waterways Commission, be carried out, then ships of 20-foot draft will be able to pass from Fort William to Montreal—and thence across the Atlantic.

Montreal thus possesses the combined advantages of a sea and an inland port, with a considerable margin of proximity to the British Isles over any Atlantic port in the United States. Moreover, as the converging point of the three great transcontinental railways of Canada, Montreal is the natural exporting and collecting depot of the rail-borne as well as the water-borne products of the interior. If geography ever conferred economic favors, the most neglected niece on the continent is certainly this pleasant island where the waters of the strenuous Ottawa and the lordly St. Lawrence embrace one another caressingly in the broad expanse of Lake St. Louis and then dash exultingly, arm in arm, towards the sea, through the riotous passage of Lachine.

The present magnificent terminal and harbor facilities which Montreal now offers are largely the work of the exceedingly efficient Harbor Commission of Montreal, created under the Department of Marine and Fisheries in 1907. The three commissioners of whom Mr. W. G. Ross is chairman, and of whom Mr. C. C. Ballantyne, the present Minister of Marine was an original member, have unhampered control over the harbor on both sides of the river from the Victoria Bridge to the lower end of Montreal Island, a distance of sixteen miles.

The work of the Harbor Commissioners is simplified by two great natural advantages which the harbor of Montreal possesses. First, the St. Lawrence river is remarkably free from sediment, so the commissioners' dredges, unlike those of the Toronto Harbor Commission, have comparatively little to do. Second, Montreal is the only port in the world accessible to ocean craft, which is not affected by tides. Three Rivers, a hundred miles lower down the river, being the tidewater limit. This circumstance greatly facilitates the berthing of vessels and simplifies the loading and discharging of cargo. Moreover, being set thus deeply inland, Montreal does not require breakwaters to protect its basins and shipping from rough water. On the other hand the strong currents of the river and the ice-shoves in the spring have made it necessary for the commissioners to construct an embankment over a mile long to protect the upper part of the harbor and the entrance to the Lachine Canal.

The commission has now constructed over eight miles of wharfage capable of berthing at one time one hundred vessels over 200 feet in length. The twenty-one steel concrete freight sheds are all of triple-decked, so that goods for export can be trucked out from freight cars on to one floor, imports be swung up from the hatches on to the second floor, and what be shot down the chutes from the roof-top conveyors into the hold of a second ship.—All three operations proceeding simultaneously. The unloading of heavy machinery is greatly facilitated by the Harbor Commission's 75-ton floating crane.

The huge dry dock which Vickers built in England and had towed out to Montreal is capable of lifting a 25,000-ton ship. When I inspected it three vessels were being simultaneously replated within its capacious waist.

The Marrying Parson.

Winnipeg claims the champion "marrying parson" of Canada. He is Canon R. B. McElheran, rector of St. Matthew's Anglican Church, who has united more than 2,500 couples in wedlock in the fourteen years of his pastorate there.

Every day of June this year, excepting only Sundays, he married no fewer than two couples—one day, the 16th, he established a new record for Winnipeg by wedding seven couples.

His wife says the reason for his popularity with young men and women matrimonially inclined is his own happy married life.

"We've made such a success of our own marriage that the young people just naturally come to him to start their life's romance," she declares.

Canada and the Empire.

Canada was the first colony to federate its scattered provinces into a Dominion, in 1867, an example since followed in part by Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

Canada was the first Dominion of the Empire to have a penny post.

Canada was the first of the Dominions to establish Government wireless telegraph stations.

Canada made possible the all-British Pacific cable by contributing 5-17 of its cost.

Canada has one-third of the entire area of the British Empire.

More than one-half of the white population of the Empire's Dominions is in Canada.

Tom Tweedie of Calgary

WHETHER or not the foothills, the mountains, or Wood-en-doors, or the rippling waters of the Rockies have or have not anything to do with it, the fact remains that when R. B. Bennett stepped aside, previous to the election of 1917, Calgary sent down to Ottawa another M.P. with a voice and a tongue and an ability to use both that seems typical of the country that opens to the gateway of the Rockies.

In the most select circles, so the Parliamentary Guide informs us, this man is known as Thomas Mitchell March Tweedie, K.C., B.A., LL.D. It's a big name, but "Tom" Tweedie —that's what he's called everywhere except in the Guide—is a big man, mentally, in stature and on the scales, politically and otherwise. His voice, it may be said, is as big as his stature.

"Tom" Tweedie is liberal in everything save politics, in which he is a Conservative of the old school, taking them straight, without adulteration or defilement. Born in Nova Scotia of a Scottish-Canadian father and an Irish-Canadian mother. One day, having attained his youthful ambition to be a lawyer, he heard the call of the prairie West. In the year 1907, a bright May Day morning—such as can happen only in Sunny Southern Alberta — found "Tom" Tweedie transplanted at Calgary, ready to hang out his shingle on busy Eighth avenue.

While a lawyer by calling, "Tom" Tweedie is mostly a politician by profession and avocation. Having come to the front in a country where his party has had a rather chequered if not inglorious career, the Calgary member has come to be looked upon as a general utility man to be made use of at any time a Conservative task has to be performed. One of Tweedie's distinguishing features is that he invariable wears a red tie.

Tweedie went into the Western Legislature with Arthur Sifton, and he journeyed to Ottawa with him. In the Alberta Legislature "Tom" Tweedie and Arthur Sifton fought one another in a political way that brought joy to the hearts of the free-mannered spectators. In those days, prior to 1917, Tweedie was about the whole Opposition as against the Sifton Government. Then one day, in the face of war, Tweedie forgot he was a Tory, and Sifton didn't care whether he was or not. They each took the hatchet and buried it somewhere up across the North Saskatchewan river, and both decided to take a trip down to Ottawa to help Sir Robert Borden win the war.

The last time I saw "Tom" Tweedie in action in the Western Legislature was during the spring session of 1916. The Sifton party was strong, the Opposition pretty weak—except for Tweedie. It was in committee one night when the members had under discussion a somewhat obnoxious piece of legislation called the Cow Bill. Tweedie didn't like that kind of bill. He was a lawyer, among a bunch of doctors and others on his own side who perhaps would not have known a cow from a steer, yet every clause met his fire for a period of two hours, during which time after man on the Government side who had milked the cows and fed the calves for years tried to convince the Calgary man that he didn't know anything about the bovine species.

"What's the matter with this clause?" asked one of the agricultural members as Tweedie attacked a provision that was designed to enable a farmer who wanted to acquire stock to secure some financial assistance for the purpose.

It didn't go far enough, according to the Calgary man, and he proceeded to point out why. "For all the good this will do for the stock industry in this country," declared Tweedie, "you might just as well sell this Cow."

The speaker didn't get any farther. Some humorist was in a back bench whispered across: "Why not shoot the bull?" And the debate was practically over.

Having arrived at Ottawa with a reputation that preceded him, Tweedie immediately stepped into the limelight if Arthur Sifton drops out of the present Government—and he will some of these days owing to failing health—Tweedie will be mentioned for his place. But he will most likely refuse. He is, unless appearances are at fault, bound for the Alberta Supreme Court, where he will fill a seat most acceptably. But when he goes the political life of Western Canada will lose one of its most prominent figures.

SAVED THE PARTRIDGE.

Three-Year Closed Season Had Good Results.

Trout fishermen from all parts of the province of Ontario bring glad tidings to gun sportsmen and naturalovers at large.

And that is that the drum of the partridge is once more heard in the land.

Since 1918 there has been a close season on partridge, which ends on November 5 of this year. This close season seems to have had the desired result. For years the unlimited slaughter of Ontario's finest game bird went on unchecked. Then sports men took alarm. The partridge, which used to be frequently found in wood lots on farms not an hour's run from Toronto, suddenly disappeared. Even to the desolate stretches of the Georgian Bay and in Muskoka it became a rare bird. His muffled drumming no longer thrilled the early trout fisherman with visions of the autumn hunt.

Three years' close season, in which by the law of any partridge was forbidden and three ideal springs during the resting period have done wonders in repeopling scores of counties with the disappearing bird.

And—more credit still to the department—there is a strictly limited "bag." Only five partridge may be killed on any one day. Only five may be found in a man's possession at any one time. And only ten partridge may be killed by one man in any one season!

If that isn't giving the partridge a chance and at the same time giving all but a game-hog a reasonable amount of sport, what is?

The United States sportsmen are very much worried this year over its game bird and animal situation. Cheap licenses and unlimited bags and long open seasons are blamed for the disappearance of game in many parts of the States. William T. Hornaday, director of the New York Zoological Park, had a full page article in the Canadian Magazine recently entitled "Thoughtless American Hunters Are Killing Their Own Sport." His advocates far larger non-resident license fees, much shorter open seasons, and a severely restricted limit to the number of all kinds of game that may be killed.

In some respects Ontario has to co-operate with the States in regard to some kinds of game, such as ducks and geese. If the United States permits the limitless killing of wild ducks there is no use restricting Canadian gunners, as ducks are migratory, and our preserving of them would merely enlarge the United States bags. Ducks may now be shot in Ontario from September 1 to December 15, and the limit of one man is 200 in a season. Sale of any game bird is now prohibited, and that will save some ducks.

In regard to deer, the situation seems good. Mr. D. McDonald, Deputy Minister of Game and Fisheries, says that deer are abundant through the forested parts of the province and especially in the country north and west of Lake Superior. The short season and limit of one deer per hunter has helped increase their number.

There are now three different seasons and three separate zones for deer-hunting in Ontario. South of the line of the French River, Lake Nipissing and Mattawa river, the season is from November 5 to November 20, a period of 15 days. North of that line to the Canadian National Railway, the former G.T.P., the season is from October 25 to November 30, a period of 37 days. North of the Canadian National (G.T.P.), to October 1 to November 30, a period of two months. Thus the Canadian sportsman has plenty of time to select his hunting trip.

Earl Ferrers' Hanging.

One of the earliest known occasions on which the drop was used in hanging was at the execution of Earl Ferrers in 1760. The family of this nobleman had a drop made in the scaffold so that his lordship might not swing off from a cart like a plebeian culprit. The new arrangement did not seem to act very well, for the earl did not die for four minutes.

Cow's Milk for Foal.

When beginning to give a foal cow's milk do so most gradually. If it is suddenly given a full meal, indigestion and troublesome results will be sure to occur, but if given in small quantities, and often, there should be no complaints. When once accustomed to a cow's milk there will be few or no dangers in feeding more liberally.

Brick-Laying Army Wanted.

Before the war there were 900,000 men employed in the building trade in England; now there are only 650,000. A great brick-laying army is wanted.

Efficiency.

A certain floorwalker in a big department store is likely to lose his place if he does not improve in his manners. "Gracious," exclaimed a fat woman rushing up to him just after losing sight of her husband. "I'm looking for a small man with one eye." "Well, madam," suggested the floorwalker, "if he's a very small man, perhaps you'd better use

Science and Law

IN the year 1895 a great sensation was occasioned in Toronto by what was known as the Hyams murder case. Two men bearing the names of Dallas Hyams and Harry Hyams were residents of Toronto for a short time, their place of abode being on Gould street, and they had rented a warehouse on College street, not far from Yonge street. The residence still stands but the warehouse has been long since removed to make room for a more imposing structure. It was in the warehouse that they carried on some sort of a mercantile business, and it was there also that it was said that a young man, a friend of the two Hyams men, met his death under circumstances pointing to murder. The victim bore the name of William Wells. It was said that the death was occasioned by violence, and that the body of the deceased was placed under the weight or counterpoise of a freight elevator, with which the warehouse was equipped, the intention being to let it be imagined that the death was accidental, having been caused by the unexpected fall of the elevator weight while the youth was in a recumbent position at the foot of the elevator shaft and engaged in some operation with it.

At the trial eminent lawyers appeared on both sides, the late E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., and the late Mr. Justice Lount appearing for the two accused men, while the crown's case was ably presented by the late B. B. Osler, K. C., and Mr. Hartley H. Dewart, K. C., who is still among us. Considerable importance was attached to the allegation which was made in the case to the effect that the weight got stuck in the shaft, and began to fall in an inclined position, and the defence maintained that this inclination caused the corner of the weight to fall upon the deceased's head, and inflicted upon him the wound of which he died. It was part of the crown's case that this was not so, and that even if the weight began its fall in an inclined manner, it would right itself before completing its downward journey.

An expert witness in the person of a professor of Physical Science from Toronto University was called to give evidence upon the question. For some reason or other his evidence upon this point was not sufficiently definite or sufficiently impressive to suit the theory of the crown, and when he had finished his evidence in chief, Mr. Osler arose, in all his splendid majesty, to perform upon the unoffending university professor all the operation which the exigencies of his case so well able to do, and before done it the crown counsel, namely to make the witness eat his previous utterances and to admit sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the great counsel for the crown.

Mr. Osler asked the witness to repeat what he already had said, and then as if in supreme disdain of him if he intended the intelligent jury to believe that if a weight fell in an inclined position it would right to assume the perfectly perpendicular before reaching the ground? The humble professor meekly admitted that that was what he meant.

"Then," said the mighty Osler, "we shall see how long your theory lasts," and tying a heavy cord to a stout beam in the roof of the court, the book fell, when to the surprise of the illustrious lawyer it never swerved from its angular position and struck the floor with a terrible noise, and with its corner hitting the floor first.

As if maddened at the provoking manner in which science had baffled the theory of the crown, Mr. Osler in perfect disgust turned around, descended from the table, and told him (witness) he was done, while the crown's theory, and with it all hope of convicting the accused men of murder, vanished at once from the minds of everyone connected with the case.

A little later a verdict of "Not Guilty" freed the two men.

A Wise Westerner.

What is regarded largely as a triumph for conciliatory methods, introduced in the treatment of public functionaries in the Saar Valley by ex-Mayor Waugh, of Winnipeg, Canadian member of the Saar Valley Commission, set up under the League of Nations to administer the affairs of that territory for the next fifteen years, is contained in a message received from Saarbruckene in London. It states both the Bavarian and German Governments have agreed to transfer authority over their former employes in the Saar Valley district, which was a matter of contention between these officials and the commission, until Mr. Waugh effected a better understanding of the commission.

High Salaries.

Canada's Prime Minister is to receive $15,000 per year and members of the Cabinet $10,000. President Wilson is paid $75,000, the Vice-President $12,000, and U. S. Cabinet members $12,000 each, but as they do not sit in the House they are without the indemnity which the Canadian Premier and Cabinet Ministers will get in addition to the salaries mentioned. In other words, Canada's Cabinet members will be paid $2,000 per annum more than those of the United States.

THAT MYSTERIOUS WORM.

How Insect Gets Into Hazel Nut.

Where did the worm in the hazel nut come from? That question has puzzled many a boy. He knows that the nuts he gathered were carefully culled and that none were stored that gave any evidence of being unsound. And yet, a few months later, when he begins to crack the nuts, he finds that a surprisingly large number are wormy.

Where did the little fat white worm come from?

The worm is the larva of a strange-looking insect known as the hazelnut weevil, an insect that belongs to the same family as the much-dreaded boll-weevil, which is periodically so destructive to the farmer's grain.

The insect is provided with a long, slender proboscis, or snout, at the outermost of which is a pothook-like appendage. The proboscis is a modification of the mouth parts, and but for this snout the worm would never find its way into the nut. In the late summer, while the nut is still green and tender, the mother weevil goes in search of a place to lay her egg. The egg must be kept safe from harm during the larva hatches, it is highly important, from the insect's point of view, that there be food close at hand so that the baby weevil will not die a prematurely early death.

Instinct has taught the mother weevil that no better place could be found for her egg than the inside of the hazelnut. She lies safely for her egg and food for her offspring. So the mother weevil begins to peck away with her quéer-looking snout, and in due time she has made a tiny tunnel to the centre of the nut. Then she lays an egg, poking it well down into the tunnel with her snout.

In a short time nature closes the opening and the egg lies safely within, finally hatching into a little white grub. The grub finds food aplenty and grows fat and rotund.

When the food is all gone and he is full grown, the baby weevil gnaws his way out of the hazelnut that has sheltered him and is ready for the second step in his development, that all-important step which will transform him into a weevil exactly like his mother.

YOUNG WOMEN AVOID PAIN

This One Tells How She Was Benefited by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Regina, Sask.—"For two years I suffered from periodic pains and nausea so I was unable to get around. My mother told me take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am much better and able to go about all the time, which I could not do before. I recommend Vegetable Compound to my friends if I know they suffer the same way, and you may publish my letter if it will help any one, as I hope it will."—Miss Z. G. BLACKWELL, 2078 Osler Place, Regina, Sask.

If every girl who suffers as Miss Blackwell did, or from irregularities, painful periods, backache, sideache, dragging down pains, inflammation or ulceration would only give this famous root and herb remedy a trial they would soon find relief from such suffering.

Such letters seems possible that there is a woman in this country who will continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial after all the evidence that is continually being published, proving beyond contradiction that this grand old medicine has relieved more suffering among women than any other medicine in the world.

For special advice women are asked to write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of forty years experience is at your service.

The Gold Coast Colony.

The institution of direct trade between Canada and the Gold Coast colony is the subject of a report of a special committee appointed by Brig.-Gen. F. G. Guggisberg, governor of the colony, and a Canadian, which has been forwarded to Sir George Foster. Before going out to take up his post Governor Guggisberg approached the Canadian trade authorities in London with a view to Canada assisting in the development of the Gold Coast. Since his arrival he has initiated railway developments which will create a large demand for permanent way and rolling stock from Canada, and has had a report on other trade possibilities made by a special committee. The committee finds that Canada produces most of the goods required by the Gold Coast, and observes: "No doubt through channels in New York and Liverpool a considerable amount of Canadian products find its way at the present time into the Gold Coast and similarly a certain amount of Gold Coast cocoa finds it way into Canada. It is essential that trade should be carried on by direct ocean transport between the two countries. The extension to the Gold Coast of the service of the Canadian Government's mercantile fleet would be both desirable and welcome."

Gen. Guggisberg asks that a special Canadian trade commissioner be sent to the Gold Coast, whose duties might be extended to other West African colonies, facilities for visits with which have now been provided by the establishment of a steamship sailing by the Elder-Dempster Company.

A Yukon Problem.

Though luxury taxes call for coins, the Yukon Development League has turned down a proposal to introduce dimes into circulation in Dawson. Dawson never has had any less than the 25-cent piece, and would like to it.

We heard a man say:

"Let the Telephone Company use the profits they made in prosperous years, if they need money to build more plant."

That's exactly what we have done!

Shareholders of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada have been paid only a moderate return on the par value of their stock — no more!

We have made no distributions of bonus stock, no 'melons' have ever been cut; no distribution ever been made of surplus earnings. Every share of stock has brought us its par value, or better.

For forty years we have consistently used all surplus earnings, all idle reserves to buy more telephone plant. Every dollar has gone back into the business to extend it and serve new subscribers.

What has this policy meant to the public?

The Board of Railway Commissioners at our last rate investigation found that if we had not pursued this honorable course of turning all surplus earnings back into the business we would have had to provide in the year 1918 alone an additional $908,000 out of revenue to pay interest on the plant so secured. This, of course, would have meant higher rates to subscribers.

The fact is, we need millions of new money just because our funds have always been at work, keeping down our bond and stock issues, and ensuring low rates to our subscribers!

Inquest at Yarker.

The jury empanelled to inquire into the circumstances surrounding the death of Louise Goslin, the young woman who was found drowned in the river at Yarker, on Tuesday of last week, held a sitting Thursday night, August 19th, and after considering the evidence submitted, came to the conclusion that the deceased came to her death at her own hands, but that the cause was unknown, and nothing as yet has been revealed to show why the young woman would take her life. It was mainatined that Miss Goslin received a letter and a parcel on Monday while she was at her work in a local factory. When she received the parcel and a letter, she made the remark that she would have to go home, and she went home. She appeared to be very much worried over the contents of the letter, but the letter has not yet been found, or its contents known. It was stated that the young woman went to the river dressed in her working clothes, but went without her hat or her glasses she was accustomed to wearing. Previous to going to the river she penned a note on a calender at her home, stating that she had gone to the river to have a swim, and that she would be found at the bridge. Her brother, it appears, found the note first, but after reading it, paid no particular attention to it. As his daughter did not come home that night her father was of the opinion that she was staying at the home of some of her friends. It was not generally known in the village that she was missing. If it had been known, those who had noticed the young woman going towards the river, would have made an investigation.

Jury's Verdict.

The coroner's jury sitting at Yarker on Monday night, regarding the finding of a dead baby several days ago, returned the following verdict :

"We, the jury, on the finding of the body of an unknown infant in the flume of the Benjamin power house, at Yarker, find that the infant had been placed in the river, by some one unknown, and from the fact of the double-knitted cloth being found around the neck, we would infer that the child came to its death by strangulation, and that no evidence has been produced to show by whose hand that piece of cloth had been placed there."

Up-to-date Kittens.

The other day the little daughter of a Salem household was watching a family of small kittens at their first meal of chicken bones. They were somewhat shy at having to eat before an audience, and first one little kitten would come up and get one little chicken bone and retire to a corner of the arbor to eat, and then another little kitten would slip up for its choice and run off with it to his own particular place. The child watched them for a long while and then she came running into the house. "Mother," she said, "do you know what we are doing? We are running a cateria out here instead of a cafeteria. THE WOOL SITUATION

The following news letter received from the Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers Limited may be of interest to sheep owners in Lennox and Addington counties :

Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers Limited,
128 Simcoe St., Toronto,
Canada,
August 16th, 1920

Dear Sir :—

Since our last letter the wool market has taken on a much stronger tone at least in so far as this organization is concerned. During the past six weeks we have sold slightly more than 1½ million pounds of the 1920 clip at prices that should prove very satisfactory to the sheep raisers of Canada. These sales have been about equally divided between Eastern and Western wools and over half of the quantity has been supplied to Canadian Mills. Prices on the above sales have ranged approximately as follows :

Eastern Wool : Fine medium staple, 58c. to 60c. per lb. ; medium staple, 52c. to 55c. ; low medium staple, 40c. to 45c. ; low staple, 32c. to 36c. ; coarse 24c. to 25c.

Western Range Wool : Fine staple, 51c. to 53c. per lb. ; fine clothing, 48c. to 52c. ; fine medium staple, 58c. to 60c. ; fine medium clothing, 54c. to 57c. ; medium staple, 43c. to 45c.

These prices as secured are certainly much better than offerings made at country points this season and should clearly demonstrate to wool growers the real worth of co-operative marketing. One very encouraging feature about sales made up to date is the fact that many of the buyers are old customers of 1918 and 1919. This goes to prove two things : First—the sheep owners of this country are gradually learning to put their wool up in a style that appeals to the mill man ; properly shorn and rolled, tied with paper twine and free from all foreign matter. Heretofore Canadian Mills have been prejudiced against Canadian wool, looking upon it as an unknown quantity. Second—Proper grading is teaching the farmer that he can expect exactly what his wool is worth. Furthermore the grading system as now established is gaining the confidence of Canadian mills. They know that the grades will run true to standard and that when shipment is made it will be in accordance with sample submitted. There can undoubtedly be built up right here in Canada amongst Canadian mills, a demand for Canadian wool.

Yours very truly,
CANADIAN CO-OPERATIVE WOOL GROWERS LIMITED.

HYDRO ELECTRIC SYSTEM IS NOT PROVINCIAL

Any person who knows the history of the Hydro-Electric System of Ontario must admit that it was municipal in its origin. Representatives of the cities and towns saw with concern the tendency of the Provincial Government of the day to alienate power-rights at Niagara and elsewhere. Clearly, the Administration had no intention of conserving natural power-resources for the benefit of all the people. The reason was obvious. Niagara might serve only a section of the Province, and heavy capital expenditures by the Province on development and transmission could not be justified before the people living between Toronto and the Ottawa River.

Aldermen and Councillors of the various Western Ontario communities met from time to time to consider the possibility of using Niagara as a source of cheap power. The result of their consultation was a determination to pledge their credit severally and jointly, so far as the electors would permit, to the realization of the project, first asking the Provincial authorities to pass enabling legislation and to set up an administrative Commission.

The Government of Sir James Whitney, of which Sir Adam Beck, the prime mover in the Power project, was a member, accepted the suggestion, but from the beginning determined that the Province was in the position of a Trustee. No provision was made for grants-in-aid. The law provided that the project in each municipality must be self-sustaining. While the Provincial Treasurer would advance necessary money for capital outlay, the advance would be made on collateral security; namely the debentures of the municipalities interested.

The Legislation was "a system of checks and balances" to prevent the municipalities going too hurriedly into a scheme that might prove to be ill-digested. The co-operative nature of the project was constantly recognized, but the Province dissociated itself from the co-operation. The Government regarded itself simply as a Trustee, and set up the Hydro Electric Power Commission as the executor of that Trusteeship. The fact that the Government appointed the Commission did not mean that the Province participated in the financial responsibility. For that reason, it is inaccurate to speak of the Hydro-Electric enterprise as a Provincial project. It has been municipal from the beginning, and according to the Statutes must be municipal to the end.

Deer Startled Winnipeg.

Vigor Rho, a contractor living in Winnipeg, is minus a pair of trousers and about two square feet of cuticle, as a result of a thrilling hand-to-hand battles with Maggie, a wild deer, which strayed into that city a few weeks ago.

Maggie crowded enough experiences into one afternoon to last her for the rest of her life, even if she lives to be 600 years old.

Here is a list of Maggie's thrills, arranged in chronological order:

Chased by dogs east of city.
Wandered into town through St. Boniface.
Strolled down Main street.
Dodged autos, street cars and other traffic.
Jumped over a "flivver."
Chased by small boys.
Seized by tail by would-be hero.
Hurled said hero into City Hall flower bed by speeding up and turning corner at William avenue on "high."
Chased by two motorcycle cops.
Cornered on Bannatyne avenue by Mr. Rho.
Tore off Rho's trousers.
Bit him on neck.
Tied up with rope, put in cellar.
Attacked by big dog.
Staged second battle with Rho.
Tied up again.
Enjoyed auto sight-seeing tour of city.
Chased tame deer in new home, City Park.

All known rules of the ring and mat were suspended when Mr. Rho chased Maggie into a corner of his yard, after she had outdistanced motorcycle police in a chase on William avenue.

"It was catch-if-catch rules," said Mr. Rho, relating experiences.

"I made a jump for the door, and we had a great old wrestling match. I got my arms around her neck, but she kicked with her hind feet and her sharp hoofs tore my trousers off. Then she pawed my hands and arms and tried to bite my neck."

A large crowd had gathered to watch the battle, but no one offered to help Rho. Blood was streaming from his arms as he fought for a toe-hold.

"Weeeeeeee," a woman spectator screamed. "That deer is eating the man." Maggie was trying to get her teeth in the back of Rho's neck.

Maggie shook herself loose from Rho and leaped over his head, in an effort to escape. Rho, however, made a flying tackle and grabbed the animal's hind feet as they sailed aloft, and deer and man came down in a heap. Rho applied half-Nelson, and his wife got a piece of rope and tied up the deer's feet.

Preserve Historic Spots.

Mayor Church of Toronto has written Premier Borden, suggesting that the historic battle-grounds of the war of 1812-14 be acquired by the country and handed over to some commission, preferably the Niagara Falls Park Commission. The mayor says he refers especially to the grounds around Fort Erie, the house where William Lyon Mackenzie was born, at Queenston, the ruins of Fort Mississauga and other forts in the district.

RUPERT HUGHES

One of the Most Popular of American Authors

At first glance Mr. Hughes might be taken as a man who has chosen an army career. Be not deceived, however. The uniform only signifies the patriotism of Rupert Hughes, who served as a captain in the intelligence department of the government during the war. It might be added that he is also a member of the Spanish-American war, enlisting as a private and coming out as a captain.

But Rupert Hughes' chief claim to fame is as a writer of fiction and plays, being the author of some 20 odd books and a dozen plays. His stories have won for him a place among the most popular and successful writers of the day. One of the best of his stories is "The Thirteenth Commandment," a remarkably entertaining tale of modern life. We have secured this story for our next serial and if you will read the first instalment you'll surely want to follow it to the end. And, what is more, you won't regret it.

Wolves Wiser Than Foxes.

The wisdom of the fox is not so evident as the saying is widespread, but the more I see of wolves the more respect I have for their intelligence, which is unique among the non-human inhabitants of the north.

The second day on the new land I met a wolf that came running toward me at first, for he could not fail to mistake me at a distance for a caribou, but when he got within two hundred yards and could see more plainly he realised my strangeness, and, what is truly remarkable, inferred that I might be dangerous.

This wolf could certainly never have seen a human before, and the only dark thing of the comparable to mine that he had ever seen must have been either a caribou or a muskox. The caribou are his prey, and while he seldom kills a muskox he at least has no reason to fear that exceptionally clumsy and slow-moving animal.

But at two hundred yards this wolf paused and, after a good look that satisfied him that I was something new in his experience, commenced to circle me at that distance to get my wind. When he got it it took him but a sniff or two and he was off at top speed.

The similarly unsophisticated Eskimoes of this region will commonly run within ten or fifteen yards of you and follow you around for miles, barking like a toy dog following a pedestrian. — Vilhjalmur Stefansson in Harper's.

When Rule of Road Changes.

When at a date yet to be indicated by the Lieutenant-Governor of the province, British Columbia falls in line with the rest of the American continent and changes its rules of the road from left to right, one of the largest and most intricate feats of engineering in the history of street railway operation in Canada will confront the British Columbia Electric Railway Co., costing anywhere from $500,000 to $1,000,000. Large crews of men will have to work at least 150 days in Vancouver, probably somewhat less in Victoria where the problems are not so involved.

All cars, with the exception of the interurban are built to conform with the "keep to the left" rule, and to change the rule of the road does not simply mean turning the cars around and running them on the other track. Many replacements must be made.

All switches must be taken up, and new ones installed, but perhaps the most delicate operation involved will be the rectifying of trolley wires, which do not follow the natural curve of the ear around the track, but are adjusted to the swing of the car.

As the result of the change a large influx of automobile tourists, eager to view the splendors of the Sunset Province, and undeterred by fear of accident, is expected.

Music In Schools.

From recent developments in Western Canadian educational circles, it would appear that the bonds of red tape will soon be cast aside. Saskatchewan provides that music shall be an optional study in the High Schools of that province. This provision states also that credit will be given for a musical education received elsewhere. The candidate presenting official evidence of having obtained a certificate in piano or theory may be exempted from examination in algebra or agriculture, Latin or Greek. This shows what the world is coming to. Imagine music being accepted in place of algebra as part of the training necessary for a second-class certificate in the old days!

For Sea-going Craft.

For sea-going craft a window has been invented containing a disk of glass which is revolved by an electric motor, throwing off rain or spray that falls on it and affording clear vision at all times.

"Flu" Pulled Gilette Down to 100 Pounds. Tanlac Pulled Him Up to 148.

"For the benefit of others who are suffering from the after effects of Influenza and are in a run down condition, I want to tell of the wonderful results I have gotten from Tanlac," said George Gilette, 448 Logan Avenue, Winnipeg, Man, a few days ago. Mr. Gilette is a motorman on the Winnipeg Street Railway and is well known there, having lived in Winnipeg for many years.

"About a year ago", said Mr. Gilette in explaining his case, "I had an attack of 'Flu' that came near putting me out of commission. For six weeks I was down in bed propped up with pillows and for eight weeks after I did get up I was unable to work a lick. I came out of the hospital weighing less than 100 pounds. My wife could easily have carried me around in her arms, and since I have taken Tanlac and gotten well our neighbors have told us that they had no idea I would recover The 'Flu' left me without any appetite and I ate so little it was hardly any use for me to go to the table. My circulation was so poor and I was so weak that I really thought my heart was affected. I had terrible headaches nearly all the time, and thought my back would break it hurt so. Nothing helped me and I was just about ready to give up the fight.

"My wife had been keeping up with the Tanlac testimonials and brought me a bottle of that medicine. I had little hopes of it doing me any good, but it has completely overhauled me. It has built me up until now my weight is 148 up until now my weight is one hundred and forty eight pounds, and our neighbors who thought I could not live come in to see and go away praising Tanlac. My appetite is fine, I eat just anything set before me and have gotten rid of the headaches, pains in the back and all other miserable feelings that 'Flu' left me with. I feel so well and strong now that after coming home from my run in the evenings I help my wife with her work and keep up the repairs about the house. Before taking Tanlac I could hardly sleep and always felt dead tired, but now I sleep like a log and get up in the mornings feeling fine and dandy. After getting such wonderful results I can't help praising Tanlac and I recommend it every chance I have."

Tanlac is sold in Napanee at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON.

SEEKING REPTILES

Scientific Expedition In Valley of Red River.

Another expedition to look for the bones of great prehistoric reptiles in the Red River valley of Alberta is now at work. This time it is under the direction of Dr. W. A. Parks, of the University of Toronto and the Royal Ontario Museum.

For a number of years these expeditions have been an annual summer journey for three months. Two years ago the almost perfect specimen of the kritosaurus incurvimanus, which has just been finally chipped free from the rock and presented to the museum, was found, making a distinct addition to the records of science and giving to Toronto the only specimen of the species yet discovered.

Three incomplete skeletons of the kritosaurus and a great horned head of a brontosaurus, 4 feet 6 inches in length, were found by the professor, but have not yet been carved from the rock. It is the hope of Prof. Parks to collect ultimately for the Royal Ontario Museum one of the finest exhibits of dinosaurs in existance.

The locality and the method of finding the specimens are described by Prof. Parks. "The river cuts right through a flat prairie to a depth of 400 feet, forming a whole lot of broken buttes, and it is among these that the bones are discovered. One of the difficulties in obtaining complete specimens is that the bones cannot be obtained until they are partly exposed by the action of natural derading causes. Sometimes you are disappointed then, for after exploring you may find only a single bone. You dig down as close as you can and pack the rock in plaster of paris for shipment."

The Red River valley 3,000,000 years ago was near the coast of a great inland sea that stretched from the Gulf of Mexico to the Arctic Ocean. "The sand along the shallow, brackish shores of this great body of water formed a splendid preservative for those huge reptiles which inhabited the world at that time. Our kritosaurus was found in what we call the Belly river formation of the Upper Cretaceau system," explains Prof. Parks.

Rates for Telephone Service

Our rates for exchange service, fixed many years ago, developed many inequalities as between cities at one time equal in population.

In the new schedule filed with the Board of Railway Commissioners we have so grouped cities and towns of approximately equal telephone development as to wipe out these inequalities.

The rates for exchange service proposed for Napanee under the new schedule are shown in the following table.

	Proposed Monthly Rate
Business Service
Individual line	$2.75
2-Party line	2.25
Residence Service
Individual line	$2.00
2-Party line	1.75
Rural party service	1.75

These new rates, we submit, should be considered in the light of the present purchasing power of the dollar. They compare favorably with the increased rates which telephone companies have had to secure from public service bodies all over the continent.

The commodities we have to buy—labor and material—have advanced in no lesser degree than have those staples of every day use, the cost of which has made present living expenses so high.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The Thirteenth Commandment

CHAPTER I.

As usual nowadays, instead of knocking at the door Fate called up on the telephone.

Though the bell shrilled almost in Mrs. Kip's ear she would not answer it. She winced, shook her head, agitated her rocking chair with petulance, snubrobirred vindictively, and hardly so much called out as sighed very loudly toward the hallway:

"Daphne! O-oh, Daphne! the telephone again!"

On the stairs there sounded a muffled scurry like the rush of an April shower chased down a hillside by the sun. An allegory of April darted across the room and raised the telephone to her lips as if it were a censer of incense.

Her mother was used to this humor of Daphne's and paid no heed till a sudden frost chilled the warm tone of the girl's voice. The smile of hospitality wasted on the telephone had given place to a look of embarrassment.

Mrs. Kip whispered anxiously, "Who is it?"

Daphne motioned her not to interrupt, and her voice grew deep and important. It became what her brother Bayard called her "reception voice." In her grandest contralto she said:

"This is Miss Kip. Yes, I have. Yes, he does. I beg pardon? Oh!—Oh! Oh! How do you do, Mr. Wmbwm."

"Mr. Who?" her mother keened.

Daphne whispered to quiet her, "A young man from New York—friend of Bayard's—some office. I haven't got his name yet."

Into the telephone she was saying, and bowing and nodding the while with her politest face. "Indeed I'll try to be. Of course Cleveland's not New York, but—By the way, do you dance? That's good. That's right; might as well be deaf if you don't! How long will you be in Cleveland? Oh, is that all? Well, then, you must come out here and have tea with us this very afternoon. I'll call for you at the hotel in my little car. No; it's not one of those; it's an electric. I run it myself. Afraid to risk it? Brave man! I'll be there in fifteen minutes, and you might be on the steps. Goodby, Mr. Wmbwm."

This last was said in the fond tone of ancient friendship, and she hung up the receiver with a gesture like shaking hands.

She turned to find her mother thinning her lips in a long, tight line; her cheeks bulged explosively. Daphne forestalled her:

"He's a young fellow in the same firm as Bayard. Says he's here on business for ten days. Bayard told him to call me up and tell me to be nice to him. That sounds like By. Also said he hadn't time to write. That sounds liker still. Bayard told him to kiss you for him, so he must be all right. I was going to take him to the hotel to a tea-dance, but I thought I'd better give him a look-over first. So I'll roll him out here. Get out the nice china and the napkins I monogrammed, and—"

"But, Daphne! Wait! I can't—"

"I haven't time to argue with you, mamma. Please do as I tell you for once, and don't fuss. Mr. Wmbwm will probably have a lot of news to tell you about your prodigal son. Why!"

She popped a kiss on the forehead that anxiety had turned to corduroy and ran upstairs like another April shower chasing the sun uphill. She dashed down again with hat and gloves, and, with bone-rope-gloved, slammed the front door gayly, thrummed the steps, and strode across the long lawn to the little electric car standing under the porte cochere. The car was very large for a beetle but pretty small for an automobile.

CHAPTER II.

The night train from New York had deposited Clay Wimburn in the grimy cavern of the station at an early hour. He had dawdled over his breakfast, feeling lost without his New York morning papers.

When at last it grew late enough to telephone for an appointment with the man he had come to see he was disgusted to learn that the wretch would not be visible till the next day.

It was then that Bayard Kip's parting behest to call up his sister recurred to Wimburn. He planned to compose a formal note of self-introduction, but Bayard had forgotten to tell him his sister's name or his father's initials. There were several Kips in the telephone book, and he could not tell which would be which. He decided to call up each number and ask a maid or somebody if Mr. Bayard Kip's people lived there.

The very first number he called brought Daphne herself suddenly voice to voice with him. Voices are characters, and it was a case of love at first hearing with him. She had him smiling and cooing at the second phrase. He felt that she was going to make his stay in Cleveland pleasant.

He formed all sorts of pictures of her while he waited on the hotel steps, but when she stepped out of her car and looked about she was none of the Missus Kip he had planned. She was a round, pretty little thing, amiable of eye and humorous about the lips, and cunningly dressed. She looked as if she would be a plucky, tireless sportswoman; yet she had a wistful, tender huggableness that a girl ought not to lose, however well she plays tennis.

"Is this Mr.—" she began. He was too nervous to notice her pause.

He retorted, "Is this Miss Kip?"

He noted that she shook hands well, with a boyish clench accompanied by an odd little dash of the hand.

"Mighty nice of you to take me off this desert island," he beamed.

"Mighty glad to have the privilege," she said as she verified the fraternity pin on his overcoat. "Mother is dying to hear how Bayard is."

Mothers have little power left as guardians, but the children find that the title has a certain value at times in keeping order.

"Won't you get in?" said Daphne, pointing to her car. She made him crowd in first, then followed and closed the door and pulled the throttle.

He meditated aloud: "How wonderful it really is that you should talk to me over the telephone and invite me to your home and come and get me like this."

"What's so wonderful about that?" said Daphne. "Everybody does it."

"Everything that everybody does is wonderful," said Wimburn. "But how especially wonderful it is to live in a city where there are no walls about the gardens. Look! there aren't even fences. The lawns are all joined together and the trees are mostly windows. Everything is so open and free, full of sunlight and frankness. You're taking me home in this charming little glass showcase to introduce me to your mother. I tell you the world do move! A woman of today has a lot to be thankful for. You ought to be mighty happy."

"Ought to be hasn't much to do with it," Daphne sighed. "We've got a lot to get yet—and a lot to get rid of."

He sank back discouraged. The sex was still insatiable.

After a short ride they turned into a driveway leading through a spacious expanse of grass dotted with trees and shrubs, to a homelike house without beauty or ugliness—a house that had grown with the personalities of the occupants. The only ostentations about the place were the cupola of an earlier day and the porte cochere stuck out like a broken wing.

She led him into the house and waved him toward the hall tree. When he had set down his hat and stick she led him into the drawing room.

"Mother, we're home."

"Yes, dear," said Mrs. Kip, who called Daphne "dear" before company.

"Mother," said Daphne, "I want to present Mr.—" (mumble—gulp). She had not yet achieved his name.

Her mother shocked her by saying, "Delighted to meet you, Mr.—I didn't quite catch the name."

Daphne blushed for her mother's query, but was glad to overhear the stranger's answer:

"I am Mr. Wimburn, Mrs. Kip—Clay Wimburn."

At this moment a tall, shambling man walked in. He looked as if he looked older than he was. His spectacles overwhelmed a rather unsuccessful nose. Daphne hardly needed to introduce him as her father. She gave Wimburn a name now, and he felt called upon to explain his incursion.

"I know your son Bayard very well. I'm in his office. We belong to the same fraternity—different chapters of course. We struck up a great friendship. When he knew I was coming to Cleveland he said, 'Call up my sister be nice to you,' and—and—"

Wimburn paused in some embarrassment before the ballroom manner of Mrs. Kip, but the pompous disguises of timidity fell from her as she murmured—and blushed in a motherly way:

"Daphne told me. He said for you to kiss his mother for him."

"Yes—s."

"Well, I am his mother."

"Oh! May I?"

"Will you?"

He pressed his lips respectfully on her cheek, but she, clasping her eyes to imagine him her son, flung her fat arms about him and held him a moment. He kissed her again with a sing of vicarious devotion.

"I'd want Bayard to deliver such a message to your mother," she explained.

Already Wimburn was a member of the household; he had been kissed and sympathized with.

He turned to Daphne with an apologetic look and saw that she was staring at him with softer eyes than he had thought she had.

Definite anxieties engaged Mrs. Kip, for tea had come in tottering on a tray carried by a panic-smitten cook, as agile as a hippopotamus and as shy as a violet.

Daphne and her mother and father went through the tea ceremony with the anxiety of people in an earthquake, and the Swedish domedary stared at the unaccustomed sight as if the tea bibbers were drinking poison and she watching for the convulsions to begin.

Clay Wimburn talked altogether about Bayard and his wonderful progress in business in spite of the hard times. Bayard, he said, was sticking to his desk like a demon, and he let nothing distract him.

"It must be glorious living in New York," Daphne sighed.

"Why don't you come and pay Bayard a visit?" Wimburn suggested.

"He wouldn't have time to take me anywhere, and I don't know anybody else there."

"You know me. And I'd be only too glad to try to repay your hospitality to me."

Mrs. Kip looked on and listened with the fond alarm of one who has seen fatal courtships begun with just such fencing.

When at length Daphne suggested that there was still time to rush down to the Hotel Statler for a dance or two Mrs. Kip smiled at her. Wimburn did not know that he had been brought home on approval. Mrs. Kip realized that he was not to be returned as impossible. Her fancy gambled in futures.

Wimburn was the victim of an onset of that delirium amans known as love at first sight. He was at the right age, and he found something exotically captivating in this strange girl in the strange city. He was poisoned with love, and his opinion of Daphne was lunatically fantastic. No one in the world equaled her. No one ever had equaled her or could equal her in any future ever.

Already Wimburn Was a Member of the Household.

Spring and love are the perennial miracles, always new, always amazing. It was springtime in Wimburn's years and in the calendar of the world; and countless other youth of mankind, animal kind, bird and fish kind, flowers and fruit trees, and perhaps of chemicals in the ground were feeling the same mania.

Daphne's cordiality was at first merely the hospitable warmth of her unusually cordial community. But she caught the fever from Wimburn and decided that he was the final word in human evolution.

They began to dread the society of others, to resent the existence of a quatter population on their private planet. The world was too much with them. The little car was transparent. Even at night etiquette required them to light it up within.

Wimburn did not return to New York so soon as he expected. It seemed impossible to uproot himself from that pleasant soil. One afternoon when he had already overstayed his furlough Daphne and he were riding in the little car through the outer suburb known as Shaker Heights—a section rapidly evolving from a sleepy religious community to a swarm of city residences.

The late afternoon moon had risen in a sky still rosy with the afterglow of sunset. The air was murmurous with pleading.

Suddenly Wimburn cried aloud, to his own surprise and hers, "Daphne! Miss Kip! I can't stand everything, you know! I'm only human, after all."

"What's the matter?" she asked in prosaic phrase but with a poetic flutter of breath.

"I love you, d——n it!—pardon me, but I'm, infernally in love with you. I'm tormented. I came here on business, and instead of my finishing it you've finished me. I'm two days overdue in New York and I've had to lie to the office to explain why. And all I can think of now is that I'd rather resign and starve to death than go back and leave you here."

"Honestly?" she barely breathed.

"Desperately!" he moaned. "What's to become of me?"

"You'd better go back, I suppose. You'll soon get over it and find somebody else to love."

"There's nobody else in the world worth loving. I'd die if I gave you up! I'd simply die."

He went on with aching anxiety: "Could you care for me just a little? If you could love me or just promise to try to, I could face my exile for a while. Do you think you could love me ever?"

She dropped her chin on her breast and sighed.

"I guess I do now."

The miraculous felicity of this situation overwhelmed them both. He clipt her in his arms and she flung hers about him, forgetting entirely the steering wheel. The neglected little car promptly scuttered off the road, crossed a gutter into a vacant lot, scooped up a "For Sale" sign, and was about to tip over into an excavation when Daphne looked up long enough to shut off the power. Then in a blind rapture she returned to where she belonged—his embrace.

Soon she was assailed with fears for the credibility of this wonder work, and when he said:

"When shall we announce our engagement?" she protested:

"Oh, not till we are sure."

"I'm sure now."

"But we must be terribly sure. It's such a dangerous thing, getting married. So many people who think they love each other find out their mistake too late. You don't know me very well."

"You mean you don't know me very well."

"I'm not afraid of you, but for you. I'd hate to disappoint you, and I don't really amount to much. I can't do anything except gad around; and you'd tire of me."

"Not in this world—nor in the next."

"It's darling of you to say it, and you think you mean it—now. But—"

"I know it, Daphne, honey, now and forever. I don't want anybody but you. Life won't be life without you. You've promised to be my wife. I hold you to your promise."

"All right." It was exceedingly satisfying to surrender her soul into his keeping. She had reached harbor already after so brief and placid a voyage.

He ended a long, cozy silence with the surprising remark, "I suppose I ought to ask your parents' consent?"

The daughter of the twentieth century laughed: "Parents' consent! You do need a lot of ancient literature don't you?"

"Still I imagine we'd better break it to 'em."

"You leave it to me to break it to 'em. They'll be glad enough to get me off their hands."

"I'll never believe that."

When they reached her home it was late and his hotel was so far that since he would be spending his last evening with her, anyway, she asked him to stay to dinner.

She broke that news to her parents and it caused them acute distress. Her father and her mother were deep in the battle that always broke out between them when the monthly bills arrived. Daphne was so used to this that she hardly noticed it.

After dinner the parents retired to the living room to read and sew and mumble over their mutual grievances, while Daphne and Wimburn sat and the plazas which the moon turned into a blue portico of mystic spell.

CHAPTER III

The next morning Wimburn woke from dreams of bliss to the realization that his hotel bill would require all of his funds except enough for the porter's tip and a few odd dollars.

He could not buy Daphne an engagement ring with a few odd dollars, and he was afraid to leave her without the brand of possession on her finger.

But how was he to come at the necessary sum? He could not decently ask the firm he was dealing with to lend him money. He might have asked it to cash a check on his bank, but his account was at the irreducible minimum.

After an hour or two of meditation he determined to beard a jeweler in his lair and try to coax him into the extension of credit.

He loitered in front of several windows, staring at the glittering pebbles on the velvet beaches till he found a tiny gem that he thought might feebly represent his exquisite adoration. He went in and asked the price. An eager salesman peered at the very small tag and announced the very large sum—$185. It was not much for a solitaire, but it was too much for the bachelor.

He clung to the counter for support and in a husky tone asked for the credit man. He was escorted to a barred window where a very sane old person gazed out at people insane enough to buy jewelry. Mr. Gassett had a look of hospitality toward cash and of shyness toward credit.

Wimburn hemmed and hinhed and swallowed hard. With the plausibility of a pickpocket he mumbled as he pushed a card across the glass sill.

"I am Mr. Clay Wimburn of New York city. I have been out here closing up an important deal for my firm with one of your big mills. I happened to see a little ring in your window—rather pretty little thing. Took a fancy to it. Had half a mind to buy it. But rather short of cash and—er and—"

Mr. Gassett waited with patience.

Clay went on: "I have no right to ask you to give me credit. But I'm very anxious to leave the thing here—"

"Leave it here! I thought you wanted to buy it!"

"Of course! I want to leave it on the finger of a young lady."

"Oh," said Mr. Gassett, to whom ladies' fingers were an important market.

Finally he said: "I don't suppose you would care to tell me who your fiancee is. That might make a difference."

"Why shouldn't I tell you? I'm certainly not ashamed to. I have the honor to be engaged to Miss Daphne Kip."

"I Have the Honor to Be Engaged to Miss Daphne Kip."

Mr. Gassett smiled. "Not old Wesley Kip's girl?"

"I believe I did hear Miss Kip call her father Wesley."

"Well, I'd like to help Wes out. I suppose I might take a chance. Do you think you can pay for the ring in ninety days?"

"Easily!"

Wimburn would have promised to tear down the world and rebuild it in ninety days.

"I shall have to add a little to the price for the risk and the accommodation."

"Anything you like," said Clay magnificently.

"Call it two hundred dollars."

"Certainly!" One could hardly haggle over an engagement ring.

"I'll ask you to sign a little document."

"With pleasure."

He would have signed an agreement to surrender a pound of his flesh.

Clay hurried out to find Daphne and fasten on her the glittering gyve.

He might have taken further alarm from the immense and greedy rapture Daphne revealed at the sight of the petrified dewdrop set in the golden circlet. Women are all misers when it comes to diamonds.

Wimburn noted only the joy the bauble gave to Daphne, and the pretty submissiveness with which she poked out her slender finger and slid it into the fetter. He felt that the kiss of affiance was worth years of hard labor.

It was hard and bitter to rend their cemented hearts in twain, but he had to go at last. She floated him to the station in the little car and waved him through the iron paling. She was unmindfully precious and pitiful as she stood there, and he wanted to clamber when the vestibule was slammed shut and the train slid out of the station like a merciless snake.

He vowed that he would work with the strength of ten and pile up a fortune in the bank for her. But first he must pile up enough to pay for that solitaire.

* * * * * * *

Clay wrote Daphne a fat letter every day. He usually sneaked it in among his business correspondence and took great pains that it should never miss the Lake Shore limited at five-thirty in the afternoon. A special-delivery letter was the letter in Daphne's hands every next forenoon.

But after the letter had gone he usually remembered that he had omitted to include some message of frightfully important urgency. So he had to send her every night a night letter, and frequently of mornings he must fire off a day letter. These cost only sixty cents apiece, but often he had to send them in double or triple length.

For occasions where time was yet more unendurable there was the telephone—a pittance of three dollars and twenty-five cents for the first three minutes, and a dollar and five cents for each additional minute or fraction thereof would bring his lips to Daphne's ear.

From the little rubber mouth of the receiver her voice came to him as from a distant star by interplanetary communication. The sense of remoteness was unbearable. She seemed to be dead and wailing across eternity.

Clay Wimburn was in a miserable mess. His health wavered and his office work suffered till it won rebukes and threats from his chiefs and comment even from Bayard Kip, who never suspected and was never told why Wimburn was unable to do his sister.

With lover's logic Wimburn persuaded himself that the only one who could save him from destruction was Daphne. With her married and all, and ensconced in a little nest in New York, he could take up his office tasks with a whole heart. So he began to write, and to telegraph, and to groan across the living wire wilder and wilder entreaties.

Daphne wept back and repaid his longings in kind and suffered heart-rending ecstasies of yearning. And finally she promised frantically to marry him without further delay.

With a desire to economize in pain she broke the double news to her two parents at the same time, telling them both that she was engaged and that she was about to wed.

They were stunned. They had never experienced a surprise of the sweet state of Daphne's heart affairs. It is really astounding how blind parents are to their children's activities and how much can go on under their noses without catching their heavy eyes.

Daphne easily browbeat her father and mother into consenting to her early marriage. Her father groaned at the thought of the wedding expenses, but consoled himself with a Pisgah-sight of the Canaan when the last of his dear children should be living at another man's cost.

Mrs. Kip made one stipulation; "I won't let Daphne sneak away to New York and be married by a justice of the peace or a coroner or whoever does such things in New York. She must have a church wedding and a home reception."

Daphne accepted this unanimously, with one amendment.

"I must go to New York to get my trousseau."

"Of course," said Mrs. Kip.

"Of course not!" said Mr. Kip.

"Why not?" said Mrs. Kip.

"The expense is the why not! What's the use of spending a fortune on clothes? The money that goes out for these honeymoons might better be turned into the wedding fund. Lord knows Daphne will need dollars more than she needs duds if she marries that young fellow."

Daphne broke out in a revolt. "Oh, but I'll be glad to be free from this everlasting talk of money, money, money! I hate it. I hate to take it from you. If it weren't for the disgrace I'd bring to you and mamma I wouldn't accept a cent; I'd be married in my old bathrobe. Thank heaven, I'm marrying a man who doesn't hang onto every penny like grim death."

In her own heart she did not realise what a grievous wound she dealt the battered old heart of her father till he sighed:

"I was like him when I was his age. Maybe he will be like me when he's mine. If I had been more of a miser then I guess I'd be less of one now."

Then Daphne caught the hunted, hounded look behind his spectacles and flung herself in his arms, weeping: "Forgive me, daddy. I'm a little beast to talk to you so. I don't mean it. I'm just excited. I'll get only the simplest things, and some day when Clay and I are rich I'll pay you back a thousandfold."

He patted her and kissed her gawkily, and, manlike, having gained his point, threw it away:

"You get whatever is best and nicest. You're the prettiest girl in Ohio and you're going to have the finest wedding ever was seen in Cleveland. And I'll find the money all right, never you fear."

He had just remembered a bit of real estate that had not yet been decorated with a second mortgage. He had bought it secretly with the proceeds of a windfall. That was his double life. Instead of spending money surreptitiously on dissipations, when he had a bit of luck he invested out and invested it in something he could borrow money on in a crisis. The crisis never failed him.

So Daphne wrote to her brother that she was coming to New York to buy a trousseau for her wedding to the dearest boy on earth, whose name she would not tell him till she saw him.

Her letter crossed a letter from Bayard, who began it with his regular apology for his unavoidable delay in writing home.

Dearest Mother, Dad and Sis—Received several sweet letters from you, mother, and meant to answer, but been very busy. These hard times forced us to cut down staff and threw extra work on men retained. But business has been so bad so long it can't get any worse. Bound to get better.

So I'm going to—don't drop dead yet—I'm going to get married. Found the angel of the world. Known it for a long time; been engaged a year, waiting to get rich enough to place her where she belongs. Not there yet, but can't stand bachelorhood any longer.

Wedding date not settled yet, but probably some time in June. That would make a good song, "Some Time in June." Will let you know exact date.

Silence followed the document. And there are few documents that mean so much to every family as that bearing the news that one of the children has gone into the world and found a mate and given up the ancient loyalty for the new.

HESSIAN FLY HISTORY

Some Facts About This Enemy of the Wheats.

The Maggot Stage the Dangerous Period—Late Sowing to Evade Injury—Trap Crops Are Also Recommended—September Butter Packs Well.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

EVERY year complaints are made of the ravag s of this minute insect, especially in those parts of the Province where fall wheat is grown. In some places a large proportion of the crop may be destroyed, while in others the amount of injury may be slight.

The insect gets its name from the supposition that it was brought to America in straw carried by some Hessian soldiers, who were sent out from England during the Revolutionary war. These troops landed on Long Island in 1776, and three years later the wheat crops in the neighborhood of their camp were found to be seriously injured by the newly imported insect. This account of its arrival in America has been disputed by some investigators who declare that it occurred on this continent many years before. However this may be, the name of "Hessian Fly" has been universally adopted in all parts of the world where wheat is grown.

It certainly received its scientific name (Cecidomyia destructor) from Thomas Say, a pioneer American entomologist, in 1820.

From Long Island it gradually spread throughout the State of New York and then southward, westward and northward, till it finally reached California in 1834. In Canada it was associated with the Wheat Midge during the years 1854 to 1857, when the wheat crops in this country were totally destroyed and the farmers were driven to despair. In 1856 the Bureau of Agriculture in Toronto offered prizes for the best essays on the insect enemies and diseases of the wheat plant. The highest award was made to Prof. H. Y. Hind, of Trinity College, Toronto, and his essay was officially published in 1857 and widely distributed among the farmers of this Province. The book is an admirable production, and is full of valuable information on these enemies of wheat which is just as useful now as it was some sixty years ago.

The Hessian Fly is a small two-winged gnat, about one-eighth of an inch in length and dark in color. Owing to its minute size and active habits it is seldom seen, and few, if any, of our farmers would be able to recognize it. The female fly lays from 100 to 150 eggs, depositing them in rows of four or five on the surface of the wheat leaf near the ground. From these small maggots soon hatch out and burrow beneath the sheaf and into the stalk where they absorb the juices of the plant. After a time the plants turn yellow and die, which is usually the first indication of the insect's presence.

After some time the maggot becomes full-grown, its skin hardens, turns brown, and it forms a puparium which is called the "flax-seed" stage, from its resemblance in size, color and shape to this seed. In this condition it passes the winter, fully protected by its position in the stem and safe from injury. In the following May the fly emerges and deposits its eggs for the production of a second brood. These eggs are laid upon the young spring wheat at one of the lower joints of the stem, and upon any of the fall plants that have escaped the previous attack and survived the winter. The effect of the work of the maggot is to cause a weakening and hardening of the stem at the point of attack, which results in the bending down or breaking off of the plant. The flax-seed stage is reached in due course and the insect remains in that condition till the crop is harvested. As the pest, when present, is usually very numerous, great damage is done to both the fall and spring crops and very serious loss is suffered by the farmer.

Remedies. — Prevention in this case is better than cure. It has been found that fall wheat may escape attack if sown not earlier than the 20th of September in southwestern Ontario, or a little earlier in other parts of the Province. T.e parent flies are on the wing at the beginning of September and by the dates mentioned, the period of egg-laying is over. This plan can be made more certain of success if a strip of wheat is sown at the beginning of the month to serve as a trap crop. The flies lay their eggs on these early plants before the main crop is above ground. By ploughing under this strip the brood is effectually destroyed and all danger is escaped.

After the crop of an infested field has been taken off, if practicable, the stubble should be burned; but if this cannot be done, it should be ploughed deeply under to prevent the flies which are about to hatch out to reach the surface of the ground and escape for the production of another brood. Wheat should not be grown again on the same piece of ground for at least a couple of years. As many of the "flax-seeds" remain in the straw, it is advisable to collect and burn the straw from the threshing machine or use it for other purposes. Clean cultivation of stubble fields, and the destruction of all self-sown plants, are important factors in the control of the pest.—Dr. C. J. Gaumont, A. C. Hodgetts.
